Maintaining A Natural Environment Is Critical

Our fighting men and women must train in realistic, natural environments. Our commitment to healthy, well-managed natural resources will provide realistic training today and into the future.

Linking DoD And The State

DoD's Regional Environmental Coordinators focus on working cooperatively with state rule-writers and legislators to help maintain realistic training environments. This proactive approach provides solutions that help ensure military readiness.

G.C. Marshall Space Flight Center

The Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville is one of NASA's largest and most diversified installations. The Marshall Center contributes expertise, ingenuity, and energy as NASA and the nation carry out the Vision for Space Exploration, which seeks to extend human presence across the solar system. Marshall also manages Space Shuttle propulsion elements and science aboard the International Space Station.

Redstone Arsenal

In Northern Alabama, Redstone has 37,910 acres, 11.7 million square feet of building space, and a daily population of 27,600 military and civilians. Redstone is home to the U.S. Army Aviation and Missile Command, the Space and Missile Defense Command, numerous Program Executive Offices, and major components of the Defense Intelligence Agency and the Missile Defense Agency, plus numerous tenant and satellite organizations.

Anniston Army Depot

Located in northeast Alabama, ANAD occupies over 25 square miles of land. The Depot encompasses 15,246 acres of woodland and 10 acres of lakes and streams. ANAD is a state-of-the-market maintenance facility with the highly-esteemed reputation as "The Tank Rebuild Center of the World."

Alabama Army National Guard Training Site

The Training Site enclave encompasses large areas of Fort McClellan and Pelham Range. Following the closure of Fort McClellan, the Guard established full-time presence and took possession of firing ranges, classrooms, and dining and billeting facilities. The 22,000-acre Pelham Range serves as a primary Army National Guard training site for small arms and maneuver training.

Fort Rucker

Fort Rucker covers 64,500 acres in southeastern Alabama and is home to the Army Aviation Center of Excellence. The Center provides aviation maintenance, logistics and leadership training in support of the total force and foreign nations to sustain joint and combined aviation operations. Fort Rucker supports 8,000 people in uniform, 7,000 civilian and contract employees, and 3,800 military family members.

Maxwell-Gunter AFB

Air University, headquartered at Maxwell-Gunter Air Force Base, is a major component of Air Education and Training Command. The university provides the full spectrum of Air Force education: pre-commissioning to the highest levels of professional military education. In addition to the Air University, Maxwell AFB is the US Air Force's center for Professional Military Education and the Officer Training School.
